Hope in the Rail Crisis.

If the reports emanating from newsgatherers at the White House are true, prospects for settlement of the railroad quarrel are brighter than at any time since the 400,000 employes voted to strike if the roads did not surrender unconditionally to demands.

The news will be hailed with thanksgiving by the American people. And if a settlement finally is made a large part of the thanks of the people will go to the President. In the fight he is of the people and if he avoids a strike he will have protected the interests of the people.

The news that prospects for settlement are of attitude on the part of the employes' representatives. It is reported that, for the first for socialism rather than as a mere seeker of time since they voted in favor of a strike, the publicity. employes are showing a willingness to "give Up until the time the President took the situation in hand, and, indeed during the first day that the President was hearing the case, the employes made it plain that they did not intend to budge an inch, but yesterday the news thousand ideas that are expressed." reports indicated that the employes had come to a realization that such a position would be regarded as intolerable.

If there is truth in reports that the employes are willing to "give and take," then truly is there reason to believe that a settlement is in sight. At every stage of the negotiations the railroads have shown not only willingness but a sincere eagerness to meet their men half way sincere eagerness to meet their men half way a blue-and-white kitchen.
